ASCO 100-Series
36" Wide, Self-Storing White Door with Black Hardware
$94.00

Product Description: A venting door, in which the lower glass panel raises behind permanent insect screen for any-time ventilation in five convenient positions, the ASCO 100-Series comes with weatherstripping on the top, bottom, and both sides, and includes an innovative system that protects against water infiltration. A black push-button handle also provides the extra security of an easy-to-use night latch.

Peter, from Georgia, USA: I installed this door myself after buying a small, ranch-style, modular home on a half acre just past the Macon line. My girlfriend and I had decided marriage was not for us, and instead committed to a mortgage in her name, paid jointly. That summer, standing on our makeshift 2x6 deck, I re-squared the doorjamb and screwed the new ASCO 100-Series into place. It was my first home improvement, and I was pleased by how easy the door was to install. In all honesty, that day seemed like the best I'd ever had. In the late afternoon my girlfriend brought me a glass of Lipton ice tea—she liked the kind made from the powder—and told me she liked to watch me do “manly things.” I realize that sounds silly, and I do understand the concept of gender roles, but she seemed happy—and honestly, it made me feel good about myself. I've never felt like much of a man.

More than a few nights that summer, we made love in front of this door. Being able to raise the window panel and let in the night air, without the bugs, allowed us to listen to the bullfrogs and peepers across the meadow, in the neighbor's pond.

We never really used the lock on this door, however, being in such a peaceful area, so I can't speak to its effectiveness (though it did seem a tad flimsy).

Through the fall and winter, the ASCO 100 kept out water, as promised—even during the Spring 2007 flood. The flood never reached the door, of course, but I mean the door kept the rain out—which is more than I can say for the roof.

I couldn't fix the roof myself. I tore it apart in the summer and thought I did it correctly, but ended up having to contract it out, which cost a hell of a lot more than I'd expected and more than we could afford. By then my girlfriend had already developed a habit of talking to me with the back of her head, and I was becoming progressively more addicted to Vicodin after falling off a ladder.

I'd like to say this door only lasted a year. But the truth is, it's still standing there. I see it when I drive by, at least twice every weekday. I just can't say for sure how it's holding up.

Orion, from Oregon, USA: Events can “take place” and we can be “in place” or “in a place.” We can hold vigil, write letters, watch home movies in the very place where violence occurred—but place, too, has its ambiguities. There is—as with silence, or the sudden stop of a car, a palpable difference between general recognition of certain areas as “places,” and a personal sense of “place.”

Alonzo, from Missoula, MT: A door is not a place, “Orion in Oregon.” I don't see any real ambiguities there. A door is only an entrance or an exit.

“Peter in Georgia,” I feel for you, man. But it sounds like you're in a better “place.” To stand on the threshold is pointless, and probably letting hot air either in or out, and bugs as well.

Kelly, from Pennsylvania, USA: These are the things I can see when I open my ASCO 100-Series door:

a white house, three stories including the attic, less than a century old a white garage with a basketball hoop in the driveway a steel shed
a blue fiberglass step ladder 8 feet in height a plywood silhouette of a cowboy leaning against the wall of the shed a Styrofoam deer used for archery practice three white five-gallon buckets
a steel bed frame several window frames of sundry sizes, the glass removed a heap of unknowns underneath a blue tarp three granite stones to weight the tarp in place

I was institutionalized for 12 years. I love opening this door.

Rose, from Albany, NY: I thought about buying this door, but then I decided to get the JELD-WEN 32" RH Premium 9-Lite Prehung Steel Entry Door, Model 018062! Sure, they cost $169, but nothing says more about the personality of a home than the front entry, and no one can help express it more reliably than JELD-WEN! JELD-WEN stands for steadfast performance, from energy efficient designs and quality materials to the meticulous craftsmanship you'll notice at every turn!

I don't work for JELD-WEN, I'm just a regular person who loves their products! They are so easy to install! I put mine in myself while my husband was watching the game! The things I liked most about the JELD-WEN 32 In. x 80 In. RH Premium 9-Lite Prehung Steel Entry Door, Model 018062:

- * Cold-rolled galvanized steel resists rust and corrosion!
- * One-piece polystyrene core that provides a custom fit, eliminating core voids and delivering long-lasting insulation!
- * Five-year limited warranty!

Paul, from Chicago, IL. I would like to provide an actual review of this product because there are frieks writing stupid stuff here when people are probably looking for real answers to questions they have about this product which is really pretty good. I put this door in my house last week and have no complants, the vents are excellent and very manuverable. I don't know about the weather-stripping just yet but will say more come winter and I also plan to use calk. Also I don't worry about the latch because my inside door has many locks and I am trained to do what needs to be done if problems arise. Which they do in my neiborhood. This is a good door so far! You are insane people and some probably gay!

Bill, from Henriettaville, OK: Looks decent and is easy to install. The vent options are also nice. The “night-latch” sticks on occasion, but otherwise, the door’s been great.
